FORWARD

The continued success of the Southeast vegetable industry is dependent upon the dissemination of timely and appropriate information. The assimilation and distribution of technology beneficial to the industry is a major effort of both the Agriculture Experiment Station and Cooperative Extension at the University of Georgia and other Land Grant Institutions. This is accomplished through basic and applied research, on-farm tests, observations and situation assessments and delivered through personal contact and programs such as this conference. The proceedings of this conference are provided to give our clientele an opportunity to evaluate recent information and developments that might concern them. We appreciate the participation of growers and research, extension, regulatory and service workers as well as those representatives of the fertilizer, seed, crop protection, publication, processing, packaging and handling industries. The presentations, discussions, and exhibits at this conference are designed to sustain the competitiveness and environmental integrity of the Southeast vegetable industry. Your comments and suggestions are important to us. Please address appropriate comments to authors, moderators or members of the conference committee or to the editor.

DISCLAIMER AND NOTICE TO USERS OF THIS PROCEEDINGS

These proceedings are published by The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension. Use of agricultural chemicals mentioned in this publication must be consistent with the manufacturer's current label as registered with governmental agencies.
